

Colonel and Mrs. Benjamin C. Lockwood, who have been in the commanding officer's quarters at Fort Douglas for over three years past, will leave Douglas next Saturday for a visit at Mrs. Lockwood's old home in Detroit. They will not settle on a site for their permanent home for some time yet, and their friends are hoping that they will turn back to Salt Lake after the colonel is retired and make their friends happy by establishing a home here. To the townspeople and those now at the garrison the beautiful K. O. quarters will have a lonely look without the genial lady whose kindly presence has gladdened the home for the past few years.

The popular table d'hôte dinner, followed by a dance, has come to be accepted as the Saturday night rule at the Country club, and the new schedule for the month shows the same program throughout. Variety is given, however, by the different hostesses, the list standing as follows:

One of the said-to-be confirmed bachelors of the University club was started almost out of his bachelor state the other evening at the hop. The young matron had returned after an absence of some years and had a vague idea somewhere that the bachelor in question had entered the wedded state some time ago. She did not wish to appear ignorant about the girl, and yet hardly knew how to ask for the bride. Taking it for granted that she was there, she asked in her sweetest manner:

"Let me see, Mr. Right Man, what was Mrs. Right Man's name before you married her?"

Consternation reigned among the few friends in the group for a moment till some one relieved the tension by a merry ha, ha, and the situation was laid bare.

Has the fluffy, frilly summer girl given way to the motor-clad individual? This is a serious question, and one not to be lightly dismissed. One of the many of the city who should know asserts that this dressing for the car has taken away all desire to wear fluffy things, and has instilled a liking for the plain tailored long coat, the big gloves and the sometimes bewitching veil. Fortunately there are still a few girls left who do not dress often for a motor ride, but among those addicted to the motor habit the softer and daintier clothes seem to be below par. And, speaking of motorists, to what lengths they have gone—both literally and figuratively. There's seldom a femme, no matter how old or young, who hasn't a length of motor veil tucked somewhere about her person in case of emergency. But whatever the motor veil may do for a pretty, bewitching face, it really isn't becoming in the least to a commonplace one.

The biggest event of the past week was the departure of the troops. The regiment which took unto itself four of Salt Lake's choicest girls, was certainly not lacking in attractiveness, and the going of the boys, whether in blue or olive drab, was an event for a few sad smiles, to say the least. The young civilians who stood guard at the Pullman containing the "just one girl" were displaced when assembly sounded an dth military men had the field to themselves. Altogether, the leave-taking was an interesting one in every sense.

The novel spectacle of a military post with hardly a woman in it will be the order from now till the coming of the famous Fifteenth. Numerous bachelors and unattached men are said to belong to the incoming regiment, so there may be gay times looked for the coming winter.

There is a real "it" in the smart young set where the handsome young man has been a favorite for the past few months, and many of the girls will miss his geniality and good looks now that he has taken his leave.
